

Table of Contents

- List of figures p. VII
- Preface p. XI
- Author's note p. XIV
- Acknowledgements p. XV
- Abbreviations p. XVI
- 1 Imperial panorama: panorama of architecture p. 1
 - Empire as image p. 3
 - Imperial and post-imperial paragons p. 11
 - The watershed p. 14
 - Utopian and dystopian modernism p. 16
 - Late modernism and empire p. 19
- 2 The double end: training architects for the empire p. 26
 - Baghdad and Liverpool p. 29
 - Liverpool p. 33
 - Egypt and Liverpool p. 37
 - The double end p. 40
 - Professionalization p. 43
 - India p. 46
- 3 Oil and architecture p. 52
 - The early development of Abadan p. 53
 - Company town p. 56
 - Projecting the company in London p. 58
 - Designing Abadan p. 62
 - Garden suburb p. 66
- 4 The national pavilion: 'A Building Which Needs No Name' p. 72
 - Wembley, 1924-5 p. 73
 - Paris, 1925 p. 80
 - Antwerp, 1930, and Johannesburg, 1936 p. 82
 - Paris, 1937 p. 86
 - Glasgow, 1938 p. 92
- 5 The commonwealth of architecture p. 100
 - The Imperial Institute p. 101
 - The imperial subject p. 103
 - Decolonization and the metropolis p. 109
 - The Commonwealth Institute p. 118
 - The Commonwealth subject p. 123
- 6 Dialects of internationalism: architecture in Ghana, 1945-66 p. 127
 - Training architects in Ghana p. 129
 - Tropical architecture p. 132
 - Tropical architecture in Ghana p. 137
 - New museum = new nation p. 149
 - After independence p. 154
- 7 The view from Penang Hill: modernism and nationalism in Malaysia p. 157
 - The 'Malayan' p. 161

- Modernizing nationalism p. 163
- The National Museum p. 167
- Modernism as post-colonialism p. 171
- The view from Penang Hill p. 175
- Conclusion: Discrepant cosmopolitanism p. 181
- Notes p. 189
- Select bibliography p. 207
- Index p. 221